Summary report on

“ELECTROCARDIOGRAM”value-added course

Date:10.02.2019

The word electrocardiogram (ECG) is derived from electro (electricity) and cardio (heart) and graph (to write). It is a transthoracic interpretation of electric activity of the heart over time, captured and externally recorded by skin electrodes. ECG is the gold standard for non-invasive diagnosis of cardiac diseases, and may occasionally be the only marker for diagnosis of heart diseases. The following course enables the post-graduate students learn regarding the basic interpretation of ECG at the bedside, which would help them to analyze the case situations as they arise in every day practice.

Resource persons:

Dr R Nagamani (Professor and HOD, Department of General Medicine, MRMCW) was instrumental in the successful conduction of the course and clarifying all the student queries. She was very well supported by two other Professors from the same department- Dr N Srinivas Rao and Dr G J D Rao.
